What's a Father to Do?

How much does the kind of father one has impact the course of his life? How much has who your own father was, and what he did or didn't do, influenced who you've become, what you think, and how you live? No way to measure for sure, but quite a bit!

The guidance offered in the Scriptures assumes this reality, too. It may be surprising, then, to find so little specific instruction about what a father is to do. Yes, we know that a father is to bring up his children in the discipline and instruction of the Lord without disheartening them or embittering them (Eph. 6; Col. 3). And, we get glimpses of a father with his son, trying to write his teaching on his boy's heart (Prov. 4, for example). And, the thought of a father with his children, exhorting and encouraging and charging them to conduct themselves in an honorable manner, is so familiar it can be used as an illustration everyone will understand (1 Thes. 2).

But what's not offered is a one-two-three set of guaranteed successful rules for dads. Why? Maybe the reason is that the task of a father is first, last, and always relational in nature. A whole lot of what a father does involves being something, and knowing someone well, and dealing with that someone according to the need of particular times and circumstances in his or her life. And a whole lot of honoring a father is wrapped up in responding to that kind of loving responsibility.

A father will meet many things along the way that he won't know what to do about, and no child will have a perfect one. But one who is to be respected must seek to be respectable. And, one who will need to receive mercy must be merciful in attitude.

There is only one fail-safe rule for relational work, and it's tough: "Whatever you wish that others would do to you, do also to them."

"Walk a little slower, Daddy,"
Said a little child so small.
"I'm following in your footsteps
and I don't want to fall.
Sometimes your steps are very fast,
sometimes they're hard to see.
So walk a little slower,
Daddy, for you are leading me.
Someday when I'm all grown up, you're what I want to be.
Then I will have a little child who'll
want to follow me.
And I will want to lead just right and know that I was true.
So walk a little slower, Daddy,
for I must follow you."
