As You Wish

The necessity of our being able to function within community is self-evident. We live around other people, so we impact each other. Healthy interaction occurs as we manage our own effect on others well.

The question is how to do that. It does not happen automatically, as is clear enough from its scarcity in everyday experience. An inner compass of learned values, and the habits resulting from regular application of them, will have to be involved.

Where will we get it? Jesus offered the most realistic, the simplest, and the hardest answer. "And as you wish that others would do to you, do so to them" (Luke 6:31).

We call it "the golden rule." If it is, it's gold for everyday use. It is practical. It is positive. It is personal. It is guidance for each of us to apply ourselves in any situation.

But the application of it is a discipline. Knowing what I know of the Lord's ways and his will, if I were that other person in this circumstance, what would I wish that someone else would do to me? Then do that. Do it now, do it first, do it because of who your Lord is. Not because someone did it to me. Not because I wish someone had. But because I would want someone to.

The surprise in this "as you wish" is that it inevitably forces one to consider what the other person may wish, or may have wished. That is the basic Christian to living with each other, and there is no shortcut to it.

—Bill McFarland
