This Week

I was glad we were able to get started with our classes on the church's deacons Wednesday evening. Thanks so much for your involvement and for your comments during and after class. It has been encouraging to me to hear that you've been praying about this, thinking about who you think could help, and that talking to brothers about it. If you didn't get to come to class, please either go to the one of the sites where John has it posted and listen, or ask Sandy for an outline so you can study along with us. The Lord blessed his church when he provided it with responsible servants, and I believe this is a process that is going to result in so much good for our life and work together.

Here are two things I need to especially mention. One has to do with the question and answer session that will follow these three classes. If you have a question that we don't think to touch on in one of the classes, or about something we need try to clarify, please either hand it to us in a note or email it to me. That will allow us time to research a better answer for all of us. Most likely someone else will be wondering about it too. The other has to do with those you think might serve in these roles. Remember that we have multiple roles to fill. Pick up as many forms as you need, and make your suggestions along with the tasks you see individuals especially suited for.

I know we've had many loved ones on our minds and in our prayers these last two or three weeks. We still have so many with so much on their minds. I am glad some burdens are lighter now, and that several of our people are doing better. I hope we all are soon, as I know you do. We've been hanging in there, living our lives, doing our best to do some good, and following the Lord. And that's what he wants us to do.

Our Sunday morning class on Habakkuk is about a man who confronted the kinds of questions that come to anyone's mind who tries to do that in a world that's the way ours is. He's honest with God in voicing his questions, too, and he gets answers—that raise more questions!—and he determines to live by faith. We're exploring how he came to that determination, and how we can. Come read his experience with us if you can.

A great, encouraging, and much needed passage will be at the center of the thought in our songs and our message during our assembly this week. We look forward to remembering the Lord, and praising him, together.

--Bill
